inextricably connected to violence and trauma while for others it became a site of nostalgic recollection Which of these narratives subsequent generations believed depended in good part on the sources they were reading In Death of the Desert Christine Luckritz Marquis offers a fresh examination of this critical juncture in Christian history and brings into dialogue narrative strands that have largely been separated in the scholarly tradition She takes the violence perpetrated by Theophilus as a turning point for desert monasticism and considers how monks became involved in acts of violence and how that violence came back to haunt them More broadly her careful attention to the dynamic relations between memory practices the rhetorical constructions of place racialized discourse and language and deeds of violence speak to us in our own time

Anton, 2015-12-24 This book challenges a basic assumption held by many responsibility theorists that agents must be morally responsible in the retrospective sense for anything in virtue of which they deserve praise or blame the primacy assumption Anton sets out to defeat this assumption by showing that accepting it as well as the much more intuitive causality assumption renders us incapable of making sense of cases whereby agents seem to deserve praise and blame She argues that retrospective moral responsibility is a species of causal responsibility the causality assumption Then she illustrates several examples in which agents are not causally responsible for any morally relevant consequences but they seem to be deserving of praise or blame nonetheless Anton concludes that such cases are counterexamples to the primacy assumption and turns her attention towards discerning what grounds desert of praise and blame if not retrospective moral responsibility Anton advances the moral attitude account whereby agents deserve praise and blame in virtue of moral attitudes they have in response to moral reasons These moral attitudes must be sufficiently sincere which means they reach a threshold that distinguishes such attitudes as eligible for praise and blame Anton adds that whether one deserves praise or blame and to what degree is sensitive to the agent's personal moral progress as well as the status quo of her society This addition brings with it the welcome consequence that morality may be objective but we are still justified in judging one another charitably based on personal and societal limitations      The White Desert Courtney Ryley Cooper, 1922      Desert, Retribution, and Torture Stephen Kershner, 2001 In general there are two ways in which punishment is justified Forward looking justifications look to the good results that punishment brings about and that therefore occur after it These results include the wrongdoer being deterred incapacitated or improved as well as the deterrence of would be wrongdoers a decrease in costs associated with crime prevention less fear in the community and the promotion of hatred and disgust for actions that victimize others In contrast backward looking justifications look to events that occurred before the punishment. On this approach punishment is not justified via the good results that it brings about. The dominant backward looking justification is retributivism. According to it the wrongdoer in virtue of his past act deserves punishment and this desert justifies punishment. This book is an in depth defense of retributivism. Since punitive desert lies at the heart of retributivism it is important to provide an analysis of it. This is the focus of the first part of the book. I argue that punitive desert has to do with punishment being an intrinsically valuable event where its value results from its standing in a certain relation to a person's having culpably performed a wrongdoing. I argue that this type of desert does not by itself contain moral duties to act in any way. In particular it does not impose on someone the duty to punish a wrongdoer. This results in retributivism being more complex than the traditional accounts since it must therefore involve duties that refer to but are not constituted by punitive desert. I also argue that punitive desert is independent of the wrongdoer's moral character and instead rests solely on a person's acts. Lastly I argue that the value of punitive desert cannot be accounted for via more fundamental moral considerations. This results in punitive desert being a rather primitive moral notion in that it is not justified via more fundamental moral values. Like other intrinsically good things e.g. friendship and other intrinsically bad things e.g. promise breaking punitive desert can be used to explain why certain states of affairs are both good and right.
