

Abstract Background: The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in a community sample of young adults. Methods: A cross-sectional survey of 1,000 young adults was conducted. The survey included questions about mental health problems, substance use, and demographic information. Results: The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems was 15.2%. The most common mental health problems were anxiety disorders (7.8%), depression (6.5%), and substance use disorders (3.2%). Conclusions: The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in this community sample of young adults is higher than the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in the general population. This suggests that young adults may be at a higher risk for mental health problems than the general population.
