By looking at changes in the relative number of Neotoma and Peromyscus species, we can determine if the Neotoma species that lived in the same place as the Peromyscus species that lived there at the same time were the same species. If they were, it would mean that the Neotoma species that lived there at the same time were the same species. If they were not, it would mean that the Neotoma species that lived there at the same time were different species.
