Brand Machines, Sensory Media and Calculative Culture Sven Brodmerkel, Nicholas Carah, 2016-10-27 This study argues that the defining feature of contemporary advertising is the interconnectedness between consumer participation and calculative media platforms It critically investigates how audience participation unfolds in an algorithmic media infrastructure in which brands develop media devices to codify process and modulate human capacities and actions With the shift from a broadcast to an interactive media system advertisers have reinvented themselves as the strategic interface between computational media systems and the lived experience and living bodies of consumers Where once advertising relied predominantly on symbolic appeals to affect consumers it now centres on the use of computational devices that codify monitor analyse and control their behaviours Advertisers have worked to stimulate and harness consumer participation for several generations Consumers undertook the productive work of making brands a part of their cultural identities and practices With the emergence of a computational mode of advertising consumer participation extends beyond the expressive activity of creating and circulating meaning It now involves making the lived experience and the living body available to the experimental capacities of media platforms and devices In this mode of advertising brands become techno cultural processes that integrate calculative and cultural functions

Brand Machines Sensory Media and Calculative Culture conceptualises and theorises these significant changes in advertising. It takes consumer participation and its interconnectedness with calculative media platforms as the fundamental aspect of contemporary advertising and critically investigates how advertising consumer participation and technology are interrelated in creating and facilitating lived experiences that create value for brands.

Media Authorship Cynthia Chris, David A. Gerstner, 2013-02-15 Contemporary media authorship is frequently collaborative participatory non site specific or quite simply goes unrecognized. In this volume media and film scholars explore the theoretical debates around authorship intention and identity within the rapidly transforming and globalized culture industry of new media. Defining media broadly across a range of creative artifacts and production cultures from visual arts to videogames from textiles to television contributors consider authoring practices of artists designers do it yourselfers media professionals scholars and others. Specifically they ask: What constitutes media and authorship in a technologically converged globally conglomerated multiplatform environment for the production and distribution of content? What can we learn from cinematic and literary models of authorship and critiques of those models with regard to authorship not only in television and recorded music but also interactive media such as videogames and the Internet? How do we conceive of authorship through practices in which users generate content collaboratively or via appropriation? What institutional prerogatives and legal debates around intellectual property rights fair use and copyright bear on concepts of authorship in new media? By addressing these issues Media Authorship demonstrates that the concept of authorship as formulated in literary and film studies is reinvigorated contested remade even reauthored by new practices in the digital media environment.

The Debate over Corporate Social Responsibility Steven K. May, George Cheney, Juliet Roper, 2007-04-19 Should business strive to be socially responsible and if so how? The Debate over Corporate Social Responsibility updates and broadens the discussion of these questions by bringing together in one volume a variety of practical and theoretical perspectives on corporate social responsibility. It is perhaps the single most comprehensive volume available on the question of just how social business ought to be. The volume includes contributions from the fields of communication business law sociology political science economics accounting and environmental studies. Moreover it draws from experiences and examples from around the world including but not limited to recent corporate scandals and controversies in the U S and Europe. A number of the chapters examine closely the basic assumptions underlying the philosophy of socially responsible business. Other chapters speak to the practical challenges and possibilities for corporate social responsibility in the twenty first century. One of the most distinctive features of the book is its coverage of the very ways that the issue of corporate social responsibility has been defined shaped and discussed in the past four decades. That is the editors and many of the authors are attuned to the persuasive strategies and formulations used to talk about socially responsible business and demonstrate why the talk matters. For example the book offers a careful analysis of how certain values have become associated with the business enterprise and how particular economic and political positions have been established by and for business This book will be of great interest to scholars business leaders graduate students and others interested in the contours of the debate over what role large scale corporate commerce should take in the future of the industrialized world
