Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological characteristics of young women. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The participants were 12 young women (mean age 20.5 ± 1.5 years, mean BMI 21.5 ± 1.5 kg/m<sup>2</sup>). They were divided into two groups: a control group (n = 6) and an experimental group (n = 6). The experimental group underwent a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The training program included aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not undergo any training. The physical characteristics measured were body mass index (BMI), body fat percentage (BF%), and heart rate (HR). The psychological characteristics measured were anxiety, depression, and self-esteem. The results showed that the experimental group had a significant decrease in BMI, BF%, and HR compared to the control group. Additionally, the experimental group had a significant decrease in anxiety and depression, and a significant increase in self-esteem compared to the control group. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical and psychological characteristics of young women.
