

New Limitations on Federal Research Using Human Fetal Tissue

Kavya Sekar

Analyst in Health Policy

June 19, 2019

On June 5, the Department of Health and Human Services \(HHS\) announced—following an audit and review of all HHS research involving the use of human fetal tissue from elective abortions—that the Administration has decided to discontinue intramural research (i.e., internal) projects involving fetal tissue from elective abortions at the National Institutes of Health (NIH), and will add additional ethics review for new extramural research (i.e., external) involving such tissue. In general, about 10% of NIH funding goes to intramural researchers at NIH-operated facilities and over 80% of NIH funding goes to extramural researchers at universities and other institutions.

According to an HHS spokeswoman, cited in a Reuters news article, the decision will affect three of 3,000 active intramural research projects, which can continue their work until the current supply of fetal tissue is exhausted. Additionally, HHS let expire a $2 million contract with the University of California at San Francisco involving fetal tissue for HIV/AIDS research. No existing extramural NIH grant-funded research projects are expected to be affected, though for new extramural projects or renewals, HHS indicated that a new ethics advisory board will review applications before funding is awarded. The board would be established pursuant to Public Health Service Act (PHSA) Section 492A. That section permits the HHS Secretary to withhold funds from a project approved by the scientific peer review process for ethical considerations if a majority of the board recommends that action because of such considerations. The decision may also affect medical research at the Department of Veterans Affairs, which follows NIH policy regarding funding for fetal tissue research.

On June 13, the House agreed to H.Amdt. 338, an amendment to introduced H.R. 2740 (LHHS appropriations), which would bar funds from being used to establish the board under PHSA Sec. 492A. The Senate has not taken any action regarding the HHS decision.

Many scientists oppose the Administration's decision, arguing that fetal tissue is needed for certain medical research, and asserting that current law sufficiently addresses ethical concerns. Others support the
