Psychopaths, usually those of the "high-functioning" variety, are regarded as "cold-blooded" and unemotional. But these perceptions of them are largely due to the characteristics of their personality, which is characterized by a total lack of empathy, a total lack of guilt, and a total lack of conscience. These characteristics are the result of a brain abnormality that prevents "normal" human thought and behavior. The abnormal brain abnormality that is present in these individuals is called "psychopathy".
