

Stephen King's first novel, Carrie, might never have been published if his wife Tabitha hadn't received the manuscript from his wastebasket.

But today Stephen King is recognized worldwide as the "modern master of horror" (New York Times), and he has become a publishing phenomenon, one of the most popular storytellers of all time. There are an estimated 40,000,000 copies of his books in print around the world. He has had three books simultaneously on the New York Times hardcover and paperback bestseller lists. Two of his novels, Carrie and The Shining, have already been made into major films, and 1983 won the movie release of Cujo, The Dead Zone, and his most recent book, Christine.

Mr. King's other novels include Salem's Lot, The Stand, and Firestarter. He is also the author of Night Shift, a book of short stories, Different Seasons, a collection of four novellas, and Danse Macabre, a meditation survey of the horror field, praised by the Philadelphia Inquirer as "one of the best books on American popular culture in the late twentieth century."

Stephen King lives in Bangor, Maine, with his wife Tabitha (author of the well-received fantasy novel Small World and, in 1982, of Catwheels) and their three children.
