Anatolia and Northern Syria Manfred Hutter, Sylvia Hutter-Braunsar, 2019-10-01 Religions are always costly one has to give offerings with material value to the gods one has to provide the salary for religious specialists who offer their service for their clients one has to arrange festivals and liturgies and of course one has to provide the material means for building temples or shrines But these costs also repay as the gods give health or well being as reward for the offerings Even if one can never be absolutely certain about such a reward one at least might earn social reputation because of one's financial involvement in religion But temples are also economic centres employing often in close relation to the palace people as workers craftsmen or intellectuals in different positions whose costs of living are supplied by the temple Individual religious specialists receive payment for their service to cover their own costs of living Although this might sound modern religion and economy were intertwined with each other in ancient society also For this reason the papers of this conference volume analyse and discuss how the cults rituals and institutions in Anatolia in the 2nd and 1st millennium contribute to the economic process in those areas Economics, 1999 Vegetarian and Plant-Based Diets in Health and Disease
