Engine Access

The engine access panel is located on the left side of the fuselage, just behind the wing. It is a large, rectangular panel that is hinged at the top and can be opened by pulling on the handle. The panel is made of aluminum and is painted to match the aircraft's overall color scheme. It is secured by a latch and a lock. The panel is used to access the engine compartment for maintenance and inspection. It is important to ensure that the panel is properly closed and locked after use to prevent damage to the engine and other components.
