Rebecca Bedell,2024-05-14 An illuminating account of the interplay between science religion and nature in nineteenth century landscape painting Geology was in vogue in nineteenth century America People crowded lecture halls to hear geologists speak and parlor mineral cabinets signaled social respectability and intellectual engagement This was also the heyday of the Hudson River School and many prominent landscape painters avidly studied geology Thomas Cole Asher Durand Frederic Church John F Kensett William Stanley Haseltine Thomas Moran and other artists read scientific texts participated in geological surveys and carried rock hammers into the field to collect fossils and mineral specimens As they crafted their paintings these artists drew on their geological knowledge to shape new vocabularies of landscape elements resonant with moral spiritual and intellectual ideas Rebecca Bedell contributes to current debates about the relationship among art science and religion by exploring this phenomenon She shows that at a time when many geologists sought to disentangle their science from religion American artists generally sidestepped the era's more materialist science particularly Darwinism They favored a conservative Christianized geology that promoted scientific study as a way to understand God Their art was both shaped by and sought to preserve this threatened version of the science And through their art they advanced consequential social developments including westward expansion scenic tourism the emergence of a therapeutic culture and the creation of a coherent and cohesive national identity This major study of the Hudson River School offers an unprecedented account of the role of geology in nineteenth century landscape painting It yields fresh insights into some of the most influential works of American art and enriches our understanding of the relationship between art and nature and between science and religion in the nineteenth century It will draw a broad audience of art historians Americanists historians of science and readers interested in the American natural landscape
