

The background is a collage. At the top, a portion of a wooden building with horizontal slats is visible. Below it, the Golden Gate Bridge's red towers and suspension cables are set against a blue sky. The middle ground is a green, textured surface, possibly a lawn or a painted wall. In the foreground, a person is lying on their back on a concrete sidewalk. To the left, another person is lying on a green surface, with several red rose petals scattered around them. A small red and white object, possibly a can, lies on the sidewalk near the person on the green surface.

The Image and the Likeness John Scott Campbell, 2012-01-03 Up from the horror of Hiroshima came a god He gave the people hope and for this they killed him as they have always killed their gods Excerpt Shanghai had changed We sensed that the moment we came ashore Extraterritoriality was long gone we had known that of course The days of exploitation of clubs where Chinese and Burmese and Indian servants waited on Britons and Americans were passed Pan Asia had seen to that This was 1965 The white man's burden in the east had been upon brown and yellow shoulders for over sixteen years now and the Indians and Burmese and Indonesians were ruling themselves after their fling at communism in the fifties The initial bitterness which followed the debacle of 1955 had passed we were glad to see Porters no longer spat in the faces of white men They were polite but we had not been in the city a half hour before we sensed something else There was an edge to that politeness It was as Major Reid had written before we left San Francisco a subtle change had come over Asia in the previous few years They smiled they waited on us they bent over backwards to atone for the excesses of the first years of freedom from foreign rule but through it all was an air of aloofness of superior knowledge Baker put it in his typically blunt British way The blighters have something up their sleeves all right The whole crew of them Did you notice that rickshaw boy When I said to take us to the hotel he answered Yes today I take you The Major was right there's something in the wind and it's damned serious We were sitting surrounded by our luggage in our suite at the New China Hotel There were four of us Llewelyn Baker Walter Chamberlin Robert Martin and myself William Cady Baker and Martin were anthropologists and old China hands as well Chamberlin was a geologist and I claimed knowledge of zoology We were here ostensibly as a scientific expedition and had permission from the Republic of East Asia to do some work on Celebes man following up the discoveries by Rance of bones and artifacts on that East Indian island in 1961 We had another reason for coming at this particular time although this was not mentioned to the authorities Our real objective was to find out certain things about New Buddhism the violently nationalistic religion which was sweeping Pan Asia
