

Models of Extrasensory Perception: A Quantum Mechanical Approach to ESP Phenomenology

Theresa M. Kelly, MsD.

Abstract

In this chapter, I address the psychical influence of information via an experiential influence over the biological basis of consciousness and the mental process by which we perceive, act, learn, and remember (Telepathy), and influence of our objective environment (Clairvoyance). I address the stages of sensory processing i.e. sensation and perception, sensory systems, and sensory modalities, and the four stages of extrasensory perception including the sensory anticipation of the event, subliminal registration of the sensation, experience of a collection of sensations that the brain attempts to construe, and the attributed understanding of the experience. In addition, I present a biophoton model in regards to ESP involving ultra weak biophoton (bio-light) emissions. This light from within and emanating from human beings is light capable of co-operation and communication throughout the entire mind and body. I address biophotonic processes and effects, the measurement utilization for indicating cellular and overall health, emissions as a by-product of cellular metabolism and an overall regulating field, and the "master conductor" role of DNA as the most fundamental source of biophoton emissions capable of emitting a wide range of frequency-based communication at the quantum level internal and possibly external to the body. In addition, I address additive and subtractive extrasensory information, changes in direction of orientation, or intention, requirement of uncertainty, metaphorical and fragmentation issues, our extension beyond space-time, the bimodal nature of psi, psi-unconductive states (e.g. disinterest, distraction, anxiety, and conscious work), and psi-conductive states (e.g. uncertainty, confusion, and disorientation). Also addressed are predispositions to psychical experiences including intention, extraversion, motivation, creativity, innovation, and experiential skills. Lastly, I touch on the phenomenological approach to extrasensory including telepathy vs. clairvoyance, temporal features, general extrasensory perception, realistic and unrealistic dreams, intuitive impressions, and hallucinations.

Key Words: extrasensory perception, ESP, telepathy, clairvoyance, sensation, perception, sensory receptors, neural pathways, receptive field, sensed relevance, apprehensive network, biophotons, biological rhythms, rapid directional switching, anxiety, extrasensory content, multiple sclerosis, schizophrenia, brain and nervous system damage, cognitive closure, introspective examination, precognition, remote viewing, postcognition, retrocognition, symbolic dreams, contextual and conceptual information.
