Neshaminy School District

From the Desk of Dr. Geeta Heble

The No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 reauthorized the Elementary and Secondary Education Act enacted in 1965 and instituted the Pennsylvania System of School Assessment (PSSA) as an external accountability measure. Its purpose is to ensure that all students, in every district in the state, are being instructed in the eligible content identified in Pennsylvania Academic Core Content Standards. The percentage of students who need to demonstrate proficiency on the PSSA has increased steadily since the tests were first administered over a decade ago. This year the targets for the number of students who must be proficient are 78% for math and 81% for reading. Writing and science are not used to calculate Adequate Yearly Progress.

Success in the world beyond school is determined not only by proficiency on the PSSA but by many learning experiences that help students to meet future college and career challenges. Although it is one data point in student achievement, public opinion of a school district is based on PSSA results. Therefore, it is necessary for students to take the tests seriously and truly demonstrate their knowledge. Proficiency on the grade 11 PSSA is a graduation requirement according to the Pennsylvania School Code (Chapter 4).

Douglas Reeves, a leading educator and researcher, says that the fundamental purpose of assessment is to improve student achievement and teaching practice. Assessments have the power to be transformative when teachers use them as an integral part of the instructional cycle and then examine the test data to adjust their instruction to meet student needs. Standardized tests, such as the (PSSA) for grades 3-8 and grade 11 in reading, writing, mathematics and science, are not easily embedded in the instructional sequence because they are administered by an external entity, the Pennsylvania Department of Education. However, since the curricula in grades K-12 in all subjects, including reading, math and science, are aligned to the state standards, preparation for the PSSA is intentionally integrated into lessons throughout the year.

To perform at advanced and proficient levels, students need to learn test-taking strategies in addition to mastering content and skills. They also need to build stamina for sustained effort to apply their knowledge. To that end, the District has supported classroom instruction with resources for teachers and opportunities for every student to be successful.

This book presents the latest research on educational transitions from a variety of research traditions and practical contexts set in Australia New Zealand and several European countries It examines critically questions and reshapes ideas and notions about children's transitions to school The book is divided into five parts the first two of which emphasise diversity and inclusion with Part II focusing solely on the transition to school for children from Indigenous cultures Part III explores the notion of continuity which has been widely debated in terms of its role in the transition to school Part IV explores the transition to school through the notion of crossing borders The final section of this book Part V includes ideas about future directions for work in the area of educational transitions and presents the notion of transitions as a tool for change to policy research and practice The book concludes with a critical synthesis of the research outlined throughout including recommendations regarding future research related to educational transitions Resisting Education:

A Cross-National Study on Systems and School Effects Jannick Demanet, Mieke Van Houtte, 2019-01-28 This book focuses on how school level features affect student resistance to education from a comparative angle taking into account cross national differences All over the world policy makers school administrators teachers and parents are dealing with students who resist education Resisting school might ultimately lead to unqualified dropout and it is therefore crucial to understand what triggers resistance in students The book uses the ISCY data set to study multilevel questions in detail It does so based on the view that system effects and school effects intertwine system level policy measures affect student outcomes in part by shaping school level features and school effects may differ according to certain system level features We start from an overarching theoretical framework that ties the various city specific insights together and contains empirical studies from Barcelona Bergen Ghent Montr al Reykjavik Sacramento and Turku It shows that in all countries the act of resisting school is more likely to occur among the socio economically disadvantaged and those in the most disadvantaged schools However educational system features including tracking free school choice and school autonomy are important driving factors of the differences between schools As such systems have the tools to curb between school differences in resistance Previous research turns resistance into a problem of individual students However if school or system features engender resistance to school policy initiatives directed at individual students may solve the problem only partially

World Development Report

2016 World Bank Group,2016-01-14 Digital technologies are spreading rapidly but digital dividends the broader benefits of faster growth more jobs and better services are not If more than 40 percent of adults in East Africa pay their utility bills using a mobile phone why can t others around the world do the same If 8 million entrepreneurs in China one third of them women can use an e commerce platform to export goods to 120 countries why can t entrepreneurs elsewhere achieve the same global reach And if India can provide unique digital identification to 1 billion people in five years and thereby reduce corruption by billions of dollars why can t other countries replicate its success Indeed what s holding back countries from realizing the profound and transformational effects that digital technologies are supposed to deliver Two main reasons First nearly 60 percent of the world s population are still offline and can t participate in the digital economy in any meaningful way Second and more important the benefits of digital technologies can be offset by growing risks Startups can disrupt incumbents but not when vested interests and regulatory uncertainty obstruct competition and the entry of new firms Employment opportunities may be greater but not when the labor market is polarized The internet can be a platform for universal empowerment but not when it becomes a tool for state control and elite capture The World Development Report 2016 shows that while the digital revolution has forged ahead its analog complements the regulations that promote entry and competition the skills that enable workers to access and then leverage the new economy and the institutions that are accountable to citizens have not kept pace And when these analog complements to digital investments are absent the development impact can be disappointing What then should countries do They should formulate digital development strategies that are much broader than current information and communication technology ICT strategies They should create a policy and institutional environment for technology that fosters the greatest benefits In short they need to build a strong analog foundation to deliver digital dividends to everyone everywhere
