

SOUTH AFRICA'S TRANSITION TO DEMOCRACY: THE BALANCE OF POWER AND STRUCTURAL ECONOMIC CHANGE

Barry van Wyk and Jackie Grobler¹

The greatest danger - and the danger which, to a certain extent, Government did not escape in the past - is to think in ideological instead of realistic and pragmatic terms. This does not mean that all principles and policy standpoints must be thrown overboard. To date many ideological -isms, such as socialism and fascism, have run aground because, like religion, it was regarded as an absolute truth, instead of a political policy which continuously has to keep pace with changing realities.²
- Gerrit Viljoen, Minister of Constitutional Development, 1990.

This article attempts a longer-term explanation of South Africa's transition from apartheid to democracy. The concept of a change in the balance of power in South Africa in the 20th century is utilised for this purpose. South Africa's transition is defined as the ultimate consequence of a clash between the political constructs (or 'ideological terms' in the words of Gerrit Viljoen) of apartheid and prevailing economic realities. It is argued here that the political superstructure of apartheid was implemented to impose certain strictly political interventionist measures over and above the general structural economic concerns (or the 'realistic and pragmatic terms' as described by Gerrit Viljoen) of the South African economy. In order therefore to explain the democratic transition in South Africa, this article outlines the crucial nexus between the regressive economic structures and performance of the South African economy and the overbearing political superstructures of apartheid.

The concept of a balance of power is incorporated here as the embodiment of a theoretical argument that delineates the South African transition as emanating from a decisive shift in power from an overtly political predilection to an economic predominance. As a responsive, reactionary mechanism, apartheid was formulated

Conflicted Democracies and Gendered Violence Angana P. Chatterji, Shashi Buluswar, Mallika Kaur, 2016-11-04 The Sexual Violence and Impunity in South Asia research project coordinated by Zubaan and supported by the International Development Research Centre brings together for the first time in the region a vast body of research on this important yet silenced subject Six country volumes one each on Bangladesh Nepal Pakistan Sri Lanka and two on India as well as two standalone volumes comprising over fifty research papers and two book length studies detail the histories of sexual violence and look at the systemic institutional societal individual and community structures that work together to perpetuate impunity for perpetrators The essays in this volume focus on Nepal which though not directly colonized has not remained immune from the influence of colonialism in its neighbourhood In addition to home grown feudal patriarchal structures the writers in this volume clearly demonstrate that it is the larger colonial and post colonial context of the subcontinent that has enabled the structuring of inequalities and power relations in ways that today allow for widespread sexual violence and impunity in the country through legal systems medical regimes and social institutions The period after the 1990 democratic movement the subsequent political transformation in the aftermath of the Maoist insurgency and the writing of the new constitution has seen an increase in public discussion about sexual violence The State has brought in a slew of legislation and action plans to address this problem And yet impunity for perpetrators remains intact and justice elusive What are the structures that enable such impunity What can be done to radically transform these How must States understand the search for justice for victims and survivors of sexual violence The essays in this volume attempt to trace a history of sexual violence in Nepal look at the responses of women s groups and society at large and suggest how this serious and wide ranging problem may be addressed

After Dictatorship Peter Hoeres,Hubertus Knabe,2023-02-20 Numerous studies concerning transitional justice exist However comparatively speaking the effects actually achieved by measures for coming to terms with dictatorships have seldom been investigated There is an even greater lack of transnational analyses This volume contributes to closing this gap in research To this end it analyses processes of coming to terms with the past in seven countries with different experiences of violence and dictatorship Experts have drawn up detailed studies on transitional justice in Albania Argentina Ethiopia Chile Rwanda South Africa and Uruguay Their analyses constitute the empirical material for a comparative study of the impact of measures introduced within the context of transitional justice It becomes clear that there is no sure formula for dealing with dictatorships Successes and deficits alike can be observed in relation to the individual instruments of transitional justice from criminal prosecution to victim compensation Nevertheless the South American states perform much better than those on the African continent This depends less on the instruments used than on political and social factors Consequently strategies of transitional justice should focus more closely on these contextual factors
