

Lament: to express sorrow or regret.

Even the most mundane acts are limited, highlighting the extent to which she is stifled by society. Clarissa walks down Bond Street and laments her position in life: "oh if she could have had her life over again!" Clarissa is desperate to find happiness and to no longer be gripped by regret. Yet there is no way for her to change the past; she is forced to deal with her present body which "seemed nothing – nothing at all." The repetition of "nothing" suggests that her character is defined only by what exists around her. The image of the bustling city as a source of life reflects the lack of inner substance that is pivotal for Clarissa's fulfilment.

Relegate: to limit or assign a lower rank to someone.

She feels invisible, with "there being no more marrying, no more having of children now, but only this astonishing and rather solemn progress." Since the patriarchal society at the time largely excluded women from the public sphere, relegating them to domestic duties of marriage and motherhood, marriage and having children were seen to be key to happiness and a sense of purpose. However, Clarissa is well past that phase, being in her fifties now with her daughter approaching adulthood. Thus, Clarissa feels that she does not exist beyond her obligations of womanhood.

Clarissa's 17 year old daughter, Elizabeth Dalloway, has turned religious as a result of the influence of Doris Kilman who tutors Elizabeth in history. Miss Kilman and Clarissa despise each other and the influence they each have on Elizabeth. Clarissa feels alienated from Elizabeth as she is changing and embracing religion. Clarissa finds Miss Kilman unpleasant and spiteful as "you feel her superiority, your inferiority; how poor she was; how rich you were... poor embittered unfortunate creature!" Clarissa's sarcastic tone shows her distaste for those she viewed as beneath her, reflecting Clarissa's obsession with class and reputation.

Disdain: feeling that someone is unworthy of one's respect.

Clarissa's hatred and disdain for Miss Kilman "rasped her, though, to have stirring about in her this brutal monster!" The connotation of "rasped" and "brutal monster" emphasises the debilitating nature of Clarissa's illness and how it disturbs her. Her illness makes Clarissa bitter and hostile, constantly resurfacing as "the brute would be stirring, this hatred." The dehumanisation of Clarissa's illness through "brute" attempts to separate Clarissa's hatred and bitterness from her personality.

When Clarissa arrives at the florist, her hatred softens for the moment as she is fascinated by the flowers. Miss Pym, who works in the store, liked Clarissa, which fills Clarissa with joy, "a wave which she let flow over her and surmount that hatred, that monster, surmount it all," revealing how human connection can overcome such self-destructive hatred. It offers some hope for Clarissa and puts her at peace, though this moment is fleeting as Clarissa is quickly interrupted by the sound of a pistol firing outside. The jarring sound and image of a pistol undercuts the joy she felt. The section ends as they discover that the sound is not actually a pistol, but a motor car instead.

Virginia Woolf's Mrs Dalloway John Sutherland, Susanna Hislop, 2020-10-13 It is hard to find anyone nowadays who will dare venture a bad word on Mrs Dalloway its status as a pioneer feminist text and a brilliantly experimental work is wholly secure At the time of its publication however opinions were more mixed It was hard in the mid 1920s to come to terms with what for many seemed a vexatiously new fangled work The reading public was not yet ready for the challenge of what came to be called stream of consciousness narrative or the inner richness of a novel whose main event a superficial reading might suggest is an upper class Conservative politician's wife's purchase of flowers for a summer party This recall in the immediate aftermath of a conflict the First World War which had shaken the whole of Europe to its foundations Before during and after writing Mrs Dalloway Woolf teetered on the edge of mental breakdown and more than once fell into its awful depths And on the edge of the main plot of Mrs Dalloway and its heroine's outwardly serene existence she places Septimus Smith a shell shocked survivor of the Great War who finds peacetime too terrible to continue living in Mrs Dalloway is a novel which provokes thought about the fraught nature of genius literary modernism the ambiguous place of women in English society and literature the infinite complexities of sexual relationships and even the worthwhileness of life itself This book seeks to explore all this and to show that reading Mrs Dalloway can be one of the most rewarding experiences English fiction has to offer
