Abstract— Given the global spread of mobile platforms, such as iOS and Android, it is relevant to consider the potential of these devices in teaching and learning. Our exploratory research was designed to evaluate the possibility of using common ebook formats to create gamebooks (gamified books) that are effective in teaching and learning. After analyzing the features available in many free or open tools, we decided to use iBooks Author to build a first model of a dynamic book that may function as an educational game for “Environmental Studies”, aimed at children in the 4th grade, mostly 9-10 years old, in Portuguese schools. This paper presents the design and features of this interactive book titled “Adventures in the Guadiana River”, developed using the Apple iBook format, and especially set for the iPad retina. Because this is a proprietary format we also built a prototype following the EPUB3 standard and developed new ways to interact with content within this universal format. Preliminary tests with our prototypes revealed very good usability and promising pedagogical potential in the proposed models.

Keywords— mobile learning; e-learning; multimedia; ebook; gamebook; iBooks; EPUB.

I. INTRODUCTION

We are presently witnessing a new era in which the classic “passive receiver” of the communication is assuming, apparently, a role as an active interlocutor able to intervene and to express a critical opinion. This perspective takes shape if we look at various blogs and social websites, like YouTube or Facebook. We are actually talking about innovations that result in the development of a networked society, in constant interaction, where individuals take quick decisions, are globally informed, and make the integration of various digital media. In this context it is wise to consider the integration of digital media and mobile devices (iPad, iPod, tablets, smartphones), allowing students to set personal goals, to manage educational content and to communicate with others in the right context [1].

It is also important to note that this is a generation of digital natives; these students are the generation of digital games and social networks. We cannot ignore that they are no longer the same for which the education system was designed a few decades ago. These students grew in a new technological environment, with its own techno culture, and they will live in a more demanding, competitive and complex world. See, for example, the prospect of Heide and Stilborne [2], for whom “the technological revolution has produced a generation of students who grew up with multidimensional and interactive media sources. A generation whose expectations and world views are different from those that preceded it” (p. 27). Moreover, this is a generation that lives in a very complex world and will have to make very difficult decisions (economy, environment, social welfare, etc.). Unfortunately, school education does not establish the bridges that allow the development of skills for understanding this complexity [3].

With the emergence of (cloud) distributed learning technologies, students can learn in a more informal setting using mobile devices, without being confined to a room full of computers. Furthermore, teachers and educators have emphasized the importance and need for “authentic learning activities”, where students can work with real world problems [4]. Therefore, the development of educational activities for students, that combine learning resources from the real world with those from the digital world, has become an important and challenging research topic. This may be accomplished, for example, through the use of mobile communication and wireless technologies, which can be moved to any place, allowing for scientific experimentation, augmented reality, image collection, resource sharing, and communication with colleagues.

In the current context of mobility we wanted to explore the possibility of integrating the typical structure of a game in a new type of electronic book (ebook) to be used in tablets. The concept is, in essence, an interactive ebook, which enables the integration of text with images, audio, video and animations. We understand that there are clear pedagogical benefits in the development of an innovation that combines a book with a game – let’s call it a gamebook – with potential in various learning contexts (formal, informal or non-formal). It is this new possibility that we pursue in our investigation, evaluating the potential of the technology in terms of tools and interfaces.

The mobile learning concept is part of a societal model that assumes digital skills as a valid stance for this second decade of the XXI century. We refer, in particular, the ability to (1) analyze and produce digital information where and when the user wants, (2) make decisions in the context of an information society, (3) apply creative skills and innovation (technological and methodological), (4) engage in collaborative work and (5)
