The Battle of Stalingrad, which lasted from late August 1942 to early February 1943, was a major turning point in the German invasion of Russia. The battle for Stalingrad became one of the most decisive battles of World War II and was a major turning point of the war. The battle pitted the German Sixth Army, led by General Friedrich Paulus, against the Soviet Red Army under the command of General Vasily Chuikov. The battle was prolonged and deadly for both military personnel and civilians of Stalingrad as much of the combat was urban warfare. The battle was a huge drain on German forces and resources and finally the Red Army encircled and defeated the German forces. The Soviet victory at Stalingrad marked the first major defeat for the German army and shattered the myth of Nazi invincibility, shifting the momentum on the Eastern Front in favor of the Soviet Union.

Lasting from July to October 1940, it was a pivotal turning point in the war. The German objective was to gain air superiority over Britain, but the RAF successfully defended the country against the Luftwaffe's relentless attacks.
