Physiology of human body systems

In this unit you will learn about some of the systems of the body and how they work together. Each of the different organ systems in the body is equally important in enabling us to function as complete organisms.

The systems are:

- the integumentary system – the skin
- the nervous system
- the cardiovascular system
- the respiratory system
- the renal system
- the musculoskeletal system
- the endocrine system
- the lymphatic system
- the digestive system
- the reproductive system

All these systems work together so that the body stays in a steady state with enough oxygen and nutrients and the correct temperature and pH. The process of maintaining this steady internal state is called homeostasis. In this unit you will learn about four of the body systems.

There are lots of jobs connected with body systems, such as nursing, physiotherapy, cytology screening, technicians in pacemaker clinics, nutritionists, osteopathy, chiropractic and massage, as well as technicians in hospital biochemistry departments.

Learning outcomes

After completing this unit you should:

- 1 know the levels of organisation within the human body
- 2 be able to relate the structure of the circulatory system to its function in a multi-cellular organism
- 3 be able to relate the structure of the respiratory system to its function
- 4 be able to relate the structure of the digestive system to its function
- 5 understand the immunological function of the lymphatic system.
