Mismanaged Trade Strategic Policy And The Semiconductor Industry:

Mismanaged Trade? Kenneth Flamm, 2010-12-01 The semiconductor industry is at the forefront of current tensions over international trade and investment in high technology industries This book traces the struggle between U S and Japanese semiconductor producers from its origins in the 1950s to the novel experiment with managed trade embodied in the U S Japan Semiconductor Trade Arrangements of 1986 and the current debate over continuation of elements of that agreement Flamm provides a thorough analysis of this experiment and its consequences for U S semiconductor producers and users and presents extensive discussion of patterns of competition within the semiconductor industry Using a wealth of new data he argues that a fundamentally new trade regime for high technology industries is needed to escape from the present impasse He lays out the alternatives from laissez faire to managed trade and argues strongly for a new set of international ground rules to regulate acceptable behavior by government and firms in high tech industries Flamm s detailed analysis of competition within the semiconductor industry will be of great value to those interested in the industrial organization of high technology industries as well as those concerned with trade and technology policy international competition and Japanese industrial policies regarding investment protection Crystal shows Many American firms under siege from overseas competitors have already expended considerable energy in obtaining trade protection but they are competing not only with foreign imports but also with locally established foreign owned firms American businesses may favor stricter regulation of foreign companies that threaten their bottom line but they also consider their own interests as global investors subject to retaliatory protection in other countries Restrictions on foreign investment it seems are not so attractive when they are imposed by other countries Unwanted Company examines the different ways in which important U S industries including semiconductors automobiles steel consumer electronics telecommunications and airlines reacted to this new challenge It focuses on the political responses of U S owned firms to how Washington ought to regulate foreign direct investment and how it ought to treat foreign owned firms in the United States Some industries welcomed or at least didn't oppose foreign investment whereas others sought restrictive and discriminatory policies Crystal demonstrates how the nature of the domestic political environment shapes the translation of economic interests into policy preferences

Industrial Policy in an Era of Globalization Marcus

Noland,Howard Pack,2003-03-07 Globalization reigns supreme as a description of recent economic transformation and it carries many meanings In the policy realm the orthodox terms of engagement have been enshrined in the Washington consensus But disappointing results in Latin America and transitional economies plus the Asian financial crisis have shaken the faith in Washington and elsewhere One response has been to hark back to the more statist policies that the consensus marginalized In this regard Japan Korea and Taiwan are promoted as the poster nations that have derived great benefits from increasing integration with the international economy without surrendering national autonomy in the economic or cultural spheres effectively beating the West at its own game The fundamental questions addressed in this monograph are whether industrial policy was indeed a major source of growth in these three economies and if so can it be replicated under current institutional arrangements and if so is it worth replicating or would developing countries today be better off embracing the suitably refined orthodoxy
