

Sculptural Form and Hyperbole

Following the lead of Le Corbusier, Kurihara (1915) and Hasegawa started to pursue a sculptural architecture, while the Late Modernists took off in a more gently sculpted direction. During the 1960s they used reinforced concrete in a very expressive way and the trend continued, leading to the extremes. Sometimes the result, one dimension and performing, more often they make use of the rhetorical device hyperbole, and exaggerate forms to move to their point, oversteering away. One finds this sort of architecture at Hiroshima City Science Museum and City Hall, Hiroshima. Tange's buildings for the 1960s Olympics combine new sets of sculptural forms, rising in a gentle, curvilinear form, with a hard, brown concrete and steel, an emphatic concrete mass, stretched into the ground like an immense water tower point. The door is tightly curved in a 'cave' way, to the whole an extravagant statement of national identity. Here, however, Oda's house is more confined in its historical reference, but equally dramatic in its use of curve and movement. The rhetorical figure, developed from an earlier scheme of Le Corbusier, sets its model, rising, curving, curved against an intense background of geometric volumes. The way these lines through the roof plane and both ends and tops, reminds one of arches and heads and rising heads, clearly hyperbolic figure.

A more extreme use of a rhetorical figure is the upside-down pyramid in Daito. This city hall also relates to earlier structure of Le Corbusier in reinforced concrete but uses the material with a hard, flat, polished surface more like steel than concrete. All sorts of extravagant figures are combined with the rectangular shape, almost gaily with incline on this same modest shape of the concrete going perpendicular to the floor and materials. Strong verticals break through the slope to emerge on the roof and set up a basic parabola to the footprints. Then three different matching figures are collapsed - the dagger to one side, pointing towards a heavy cardboard, and the two front diagonals, one in alternating bands, the other in mirrored bands. All these create a predictable climax at the heavier bottom.

If this is here using form more to hyperbole than to communicate specific ideas or functions, this is also true of the Christian Science Church Center. The work has an immense degree of drama, like St Peter's, and functions in a comparable way to the Vatican for the Christian Science church although on a smaller scale. Landscaping itself becomes part of the building. Water exhibited as a flat architectural plane to divide the images and extensive lower forms are taken up in the Sunday School Building. The left two huge double corner surrounding a colonnade and form, framed with white. No concrete, the exposed concrete is the expressive figure that identifies with the structure.

Chris Jordan also has a building for the late style of Le Corbusier in a highly sculptural direction. This National Theatre achieves its rising drama with a series of highly contrasting figures. Two strong horizontal, dark-like steps for Jordan are combined by three vertically curvilinear form of which one is at the top. The combination of sharp and blurry, of the dynamic, and powerful, is placed in contrast. For instance, flat, open walls are placed on a frontal way to be offering the point of view and with paths played on the diagonal. All of these dynamic contrasts and made even richer by the overall intention, the play of heavy forms played in an economical, moving balance. It is a grand, abstract drama quite appropriate for England's national theatre.

Postmodern Management Theory Marta B. Calás, Linda Smircich, 2019-01-15 First published in 1997 this volume asks when was The Postmodern in the History of Management Thought Marta B Cal s and Linda Smircich have chosen this subtitle as entry point to the collection for several reasons The first and most evident is that it prompts us to reflect on the inclusion of a volume on postmodern organization studies within a series of books on the history of management thought What does such inclusion signal Are we saying that we are past the postmodern in organization studies That we have transcended modernity and beyond postmodernity Similar to other social sciences organization and management studies in the Anglo American and European academy became impressed by the styles of postmodernism and their epistemological companions poststructuralisms during the 1980s For this collection we have selected twenty two journal articles published between 1985 and 1996 that we consider emblematic of postmodern endeavours in management thought as they further our understanding of how truth of any paradigmatic persuasion is fashioned through particular discourses and other signifying practices Taken together these articles address the following questions What has the field accomplished through attempts at being postmodern With what consequences And where does the field stand now if it is still already going after the postmodern In our view the postmodern cannot transcend modern management thought it is rather part of it Nevertheless the mere appearance of efforts towards making the field postmodern makes it important to account for them in the history of the field Such is the narrative that we are trying to portray in this volume

The Mathematics of the Modernist Villa Michael J. Ostwald,Michael J. Dawes,2018-04-12 This book presents the first detailed mathematical analysis of the social cognitive and experiential properties of Modernist domestic architecture The Modern Movement in architecture which came to prominence during the first half of the twentieth century may have been famous for its functional forms and machine made aesthetic but it also sought to challenge the way people inhabit understand and experience space Ludwig Mies van der Rohe's buildings were not only minimalist and transparent they were designed to subvert traditional social hierarchies Frank Lloyd Wright's organic Modernism not only attempted to negotiate a more responsive relationship between nature and architecture but also shape the way people experience space Richard Neutra's Californian Modernism is traditionally celebrated for its sleek geometric forms but his intention was to use design to support a heightened understanding of context Glenn Murcutt's pristine pavilions seemingly the epitome of regional Modernism actually raise important questions about the socio spatial structure of architecture Rather than focussing on form or style in Modernism this book examines the spatial social and experiential properties of thirty seven designs by Wright Mies Neutra and Murcutt The computational and mathematical methods used for this purpose are drawn from space syntax isovist geometry and graph theory The specific issues that are examined include the sensory and emotional appeal of space and form shifting social and spatial structures in architectural planning wayfinding and visual understanding and the relationship between form and program Progressive Architecture ,1991

Hartrampf's Vocabularies Gustavus A. Hartrampf,1929      The Cinema of Urban Crisis Lawrence Webb,2025-10-01

In the 1970s cities across the United States and Western Europe faced a deep social and political crisis that challenged established principles of planning economics and urban theory At the same time film industries experienced a parallel process of transition the effects of which rippled through the aesthetic and narrative form of the decade's cinema The Cinema of Urban Crisis traces a new path through the cinematic legacy of the 1970s by drawing together these intertwined histories of urban and cultural change Bringing issues of space and place to the fore the book unpacks the geographical and spatial dynamics of film movements from the New Hollywood to the New German Cinema showing how the crisis of the seventies and the emerging postindustrial economy brought film and the city together in new configurations Chapters cover a range of cities on both sides of the Atlantic from New York Philadelphia and San Francisco to London Paris and Berlin Integrating analysis of film industries and production practices with detailed considerations of individual texts the book offers strikingly original close analyses of a wide range of films from New Hollywood The Conversation The King of Marvin Gardens Rocky to European art cinema Alice in the Cities The Passenger Tout va Bien and popular international genres such as the political thriller and the crime film Focusing on the aesthetic and representational strategies of these films the book argues that the decade's cinema engaged with and helped to shape the passage from the urban crisis of the late sixties to the neoliberal urban renaissance of the early eighties Splicing ideas from film studies with urban geography and architectural history the book offers a fresh perspective on a rich period of film history and opens up new directions for critical engagement between film and urban studies
