linked to social and behavioral factors such as smoking diet alcohol use sedentary lifestyle and accidents Yet less than five percent of the money spent annually on U S health care is devoted to reducing the risks of these preventable conditions Behavioral and social interventions offer great promise but as yet their potential has been relatively poorly tapped Promoting Health identifies those promising areas of social science and behavioral research that may address public health needs It includes 12 papers commissioned from some of the nation s leading experts that review these issues in detail and serves to assess whether the knowledge base of social and behavioral interventions has been useful or could be useful in the development of broader public health interventions

ASSIST, 2005 Just as the American Stop Smoking Intervention Study for Cancer Prevention ASSIST was a major shift in the National Cancer Institute s NCI s tobacco prevention and control research and dissemination efforts this monograph is a significant departure from NCI s previous tobacco control monographs For many the ASSIST project represented a logical progression of NCI s phased research approach to reducing tobacco use For others it represented a controversial and overly ambitious leap in a new direction Similarly this monograph departs from the traditional quantitative evidence review format to emphasize instead the practical hands on experience of program implementation Traditional research investigators who defend the sanctity of the randomized clinical trial many of whom were uncomfortable with ASSIST at its outset will also be uncomfortable with the personal and anecdotal flavor of this monograph Public health practitioners on the other hand as well as those investigators who have immersed themselves in the untidy world of implementation research will appreciate the detailed historical accounts of the complexities politics and outright opposition encountered by the ASSIST team The collective experiences described in this monograph provide a rich understanding of the gritty struggle against the powerful forces of the tobacco industry and its allies For students in public health training programs this work also provides a unique view of the world outside of academia where commercial political and public health interests collide in a struggle to define the policies norms and practices that will affect the health of generations page viii

Making Data Talk David E Nelson,Bradford W Hesse,Robert T Croyle,2009-05-20 The demand for health information continues to increase but the ability of health professionals to provide it clearly remains variable The aim of this book is 1 to summarize and synthesize research on the selection and presentation of data pertinent to public health and 2 to provide practical suggestions based on this research summary and synthesis on how scientists and other public health practitioners can better communicate data to the public policy makers and the press in typical real world situations Because communication is complex and no one approach works for all audiences the authors emphasize how to communicate data better and in some instances contrast this with how to communicate data worse rather than attempting a cookbook approach The book contains a wealth of case studies and other examples to illustrate major points and actual situations whenever possible Key principles and recommendations are summarized at the end of each chapter This book will stimulate interest among public health practitioners scholars and students to more seriously consider ways they can understand and improve communication about data and other types of scientific information with the public policy makers and the press Improved data communication will increase the chances that evidence based scientific findings can play a greater role in improving the public s health
