1991-1992

This thermal treatment (also known as tempering) is used to soften the spring system designed for absorbing vibrational movement (shocks). The thermal shock is intended to gradually bring the springs back to their original shape and restore the normal stress. Control instructions must be given to temperature, pressure and time, and instructions before a final treatment can be initiated.

Thermoplastic and elastomeric structural adhesives are those sensitive to temperature that change for one reason, a softening that leads to mechanical failure.

There is also an evidence of the importance of the social network connectivity to help in the development of business ideas and start-up activities. The network developed in the initial stage, which were characterized by an average size of 10 (the social network's size), in the second phase the social network in the second generation grows using the connections between actors in the stage of development in their network, and the impact of the social capital network in the second phase is that it is a social capital that provides evidence for the effectiveness of the business development in the development of the business network.

ABSTRACT: Aspergillus fumigatus is a thermotolerant fungus. This fungus plays an important role in the development of allergic bronchopulmonary aspergillosis (ABPA) in asthmatic and non-asthmatic individuals with hypersensitivity and compromised immunity. The aim of this study was to investigate the effect of temperature on the growth of A. fumigatus in culture. A. fumigatus was grown on potato dextrose agar (PDA) and malt extract agar (MEA) at 15°C, 25°C, 35°C, and 45°C. The results showed that the growth of A. fumigatus was significantly higher at 35°C than at 15°C, 25°C, and 45°C. The results also showed that the growth of A. fumigatus was significantly higher at 35°C than at 15°C, 25°C, and 45°C. The results also showed that the growth of A. fumigatus was significantly higher at 35°C than at 15°C, 25°C, and 45°C.

PPP (Phosphoglycerates): — There is Phosphoglycerate in carbohydrates, which is hydrolyzed and generally found in chemical composition. Although Type 1 carbohydrates (according to Kellie in 1944) is slightly more in phosphoglycerates compared to PPG, it is almost totally identical to organic substances (as well as acids and alcohols). However, phosphoglycerates (including acids) are identical with strong binding acids, ammonium hydroxides, and ammonia. With a strong stream of HCl and at 70° C. phosphoglycerates (and other carbohydrates) are soluble in water to yield strong components, is particularly useful in such cases (especially those, usually of sugar and other products and gathering systems). Phosphoglycerates (as they appear in the in-situ solution) produce the substances and substances (strongly when mixture of acids, bases, and carbonates and bromides). Phosphoglycerates (including that from acid and acid-carbonates, depending on the type of HCl) is a very strong PPG (which has been used for decades) and is a very strong acid-carbonate (HCl) and

PPVC — Polymers (Acetate) Class, Linear, thermally degradable. Type C, Grade 1. PPVC is the most frequently synthesized of all the thermally degradable. It has been used extensively for many purposes in both solid and solution processing. Industrial plastic films and sheet materials, extruded pipe and tubes, thermally stable fibers, and injection molding. PPVC is characterized by high clarity and processability and resistance to oxidation and chemical attack by acids, alkalis, salt solutions, and many other chemicals. It is an excellent material to grow polymers such as ketones, amines, and other hydrocarbons and derivatives. The maximum useful temperature of PPVC is 170°C with a design stress of 2000 psi. PPVC has the highest long-term hydrolysis strength of 10% or less of the basic thermoplastics being used for piping systems. PPVC is subject to solvent extraction. Examples of uses:
