

NASO HAZARD DIRECTIONAL SIGNAL CONVERTER AND FLASHER RELAY

Description and Location

The NASO hazard/directional signal converter, 1, and flasher relay, 2, are located under the left side of the dash cover, behind the tractor's firewall. The NASO hazard/directional signal converter senses when the directional signal switch, either left turn or right turn, or hazard switch is actuated. The NASO hazard/directional signal converter changes the flasher relay pulsed signal output which passes through the converter to cause the flasher lamps indicate a turning situation or a slow moving vehicle indication (hazard). When hazard flasher switch is on, the hazard lamps blink in unison. When the directional signal switch is on, the lamp indicating the direction of turn blinks and the lamp on the opposite side illuminates, but does not blink. The NASO hazard/directional signal converter is not serviceable and is replaced as a unit. The flasher relay supplies pulsed signal current to the NASO hazard/directional signal converter.
