Compliance Checklist for Medical Offices

Comply With the Hazard Communication Standard

The Hazard Communication Standard, also known as the "Right-to-Know" standard is a regulation that is designed with hazardous chemicals in mind. Employers are required to provide or have readily available information on any chemicals that are utilized in the workplace. This information can come in the style form of Safety Data Sheets (SDS) and clear-cut chemical labels that outline any hazards that are related to the chemicals at hand. Your staff also has the right to access any relevant exposure or medical records about toxic substances that concerns them during their employment.

Comply With the Bloodborne Pathogens Standard

The Bloodborne Pathogens Standard (BBP) is direct protection against health hazards from exposure to bloodborne pathogens. Employers must provide and implement an exposure control plan that outlines matters such as universal precautions, post-exposure protocols, waste disposal methods and procedures, recordkeeping requirements, and other details to be regulated. Besides the written ECP, training must be provided to employees that face blood or infectious material exposure.

Comply With the Personal Protective Equipment Standard

Another standard on the OSHA compliance checklist for medical offices to follow is the provision of the proper personal protective equipment for employees. While OSHA customarily regards PPE as the least acceptable means of employee protection, as work practices should trump over equipment, PPE is a notable barrier against infectious diseases or materials. Hence, employers must have knowledge of each operation or care practice within the facility, and which personal protective equipment is required for staff in these roles.

Comply With the Ionizing Radiation Standard

The next standard employers must be in compliance with is the Ionizing Radiation Standard. If your medical office has x-ray machines that emit radiation, specific safety standards must be implemented for protection. Any areas that contain x-ray machines need to be designated and controlled to reduce possible health risks from radiation exposure. Control measures include shields and PPE for staff alongside personal radiation monitors. As with any other risky or hazardous materials, radioactive source equipment must have clear labels that critically illustrate the need for caution.

Comply With Medical Office and Practice OSHA Inspections

It's best to examine and survey your workplace continually for supplementary hazards or other safety standards than those listed above. An OSHA inspector can find you in violation if they come to visit your office or if a serious complaint gets filed against your practice. OSHA violations and penalties come at a substantial cost. Besides the high price of fines, business productivity and care can be lost, as well as even the severity of lives. This is why consistent training, education, and understanding of compliance is critical.
