Our Bad Relationship With Relaxation Relaxing In A Stress World:

Parents, Relax! How Overthinking Makes Bad Parents Pasquale De Marco, 2025-03-08 In the age of helicopter parenting and overscheduled children it's easy to fall into the trap of overthinking every decision we make as parents We worry about everything from our children's screen time to their sleep schedules from their eating habits to their social interactions We read books consult experts and scroll through endless parenting blogs desperate for the answers that will guarantee our children's success and happiness But in our quest for perfection we've lost sight of the most important thing the relationship with our children We've become so focused on raising perfect children that we've forgotten how to simply enjoy being parents This book is a call to action for parents to break free from the overthinking trap and rediscover the joy of parenting Drawing on research and real life stories this book will help you Understand the roots of overthinking and its consequences for parents and children Challenge your assumptions about parenting Overcome perfectionism and anxiety Trust your instincts and make decisions with confidence Create a more relaxed and enjoyable parenting experience This book is not about telling you how to raise your children It's about helping you to trust yourself as a parent and to find your own unique parenting style It's about giving you the tools and strategies you need to raise happy healthy and resilient children without all the stress and anxiety If you're tired of feeling overwhelmed and exhausted by parenting if you're ready to let go of the need to be perfect and just enjoy your children then this book is for you If you like this book write a review Relaxed &

Biomedicine Examined M. Lock,D.

Gordon,2012-12-06 The culture of contemporary medicine is the object of investigation in this book the meanings and values implicit in biomedical knowledge and practice and the social processes through which they are produced are examined through the use of specific case studies The essays provide examples of how various facets of 20th century medicine including education research the creation of medical knowledge the development and application of technology and day to day medical practice are pervaded by a value system characteristic of an industrial capitalistic view of the world in which the idea that science represents an objective and value free body of knowledge is dominant The authors of the essays are sociologists and anthropologists in almost equal numbers also included are papers by a social historian and by three physicians all of whom have steeped themselves in the social sciences and humanities This cooperative endeavor which has necessitated the breaking down of disciplinary barriers to some extent is perhaps indicative of a larger movement in the social sciences one in which there is a searching for a middle ground between grand theory and attempts at universal explanations on the one hand and the context specific empiricism and relativistic accounts characteristic of many historical and anthropological analyses on the other
