

O.S. Surpass II-P

O.S. has now added the suffix "P" to its latest .91 Surpass II 4-stroke. As before, the Surpass II designation means you get good power and reliable idling and throttling characteristics. The "P" means you also get a pressure-regulated carburetor and pump fuel-delivery system. But there's more: this engine joins the .52 Surpass and 1.20 Surpass III in having O.S.'s corrosion-resistant plating technology. This feature is relatively new and is very noteworthy, considering the 4-stroke market. Combating low-end corrosion is, in fact, a major concern when performing proper maintenance on any 4-stroke engine—much more so than with a 2-stroke. Unlike 2-strokes, 4-strokes don't breathe through the crankcase. Lubrication is passed down to a 4-stroke's crankcase via a blowby channel (or channels) that open at bottom dead center. Of course, unburned nitro and methanol get blown down into the crankcase as well—and there's the problem. Though lower-quality nitro has been known to cause corrosive acidic solutions to form on low-end components, it's the methanol that is the serious corrosion culprit. Alcohol is hygroscopic (it absorbs moisture), and this moisture invades the crankcase and promotes premature, damaging corrosion. O.S. has applied what it calls "corrosion-resistant" plating to all low-end, ferrous components—those being the crankshaft, camshaft and main bearings, which are both of the sealed type. O.S. also went ahead and treated the piston ring, too; it isn't as susceptible to corrosion as the lower-end parts, but what the heck—why not? Notice that O.S. calls this plating "corrosion-resistant," not "corrosion-proof," so after-run oil is still required, especially in humid weather and when the engine will be unused for a long time. I'm sure this plating will eventually show up on all O.S. 4-strokes, if it hasn't by the time you read this. Assuming that the plating lives up to factory claims (and I have no reason to doubt that it won't, considering O.S.'s excellent reputation), I commend the company for this move. Four-stroke engines are more expensive than 2-strokes and are regarded by most modelers as long-term purchases, I'm sure.

FUEL SYSTEM

New on a .91-size 4-stroke for O.S. is the fuel-pump/regulated-carburetor combination. This system not only makes fuel-tank location non-critical, but it also has a positive effect on engine performance. A diaphragm-type fuel pump, mounted off the backplate, is operated by crankcase-pressure fluctuations. The pump's pressure line is tapped into the engine's backplate, directly behind the pump housing. The pump moves fuel from the fuel tank into the pressure-regulator chamber that is an integral part of the Surpass II's specialized carburetor body. The regulator's function is to feed constant, precise positive pressure to the spray-bar.

The breather tap is located in the cam housing. Negative pressure helps much-needed lubrication migrate to the camshaft drive gears. It also helps keep the inside of the bowl a bit cleaner.

Other than the pressure regulator, the carb is a standard two-needle type that is also reversible for either a left- or a right-hand throttle-linkage hookup.

BREAK-IN AND PERFORMANCE

For break-in, I ran the engine with an APC 13x5 prop and three 12-ounce tanks of Wildcat's 15-percent nitro Premium Xtra fuel with 18-percent synthetic/castor (80/20) lubricant blend. Take note! With the pumped version of this engine, the instructions are very specific about initial run time. You're told to run the engine in the beginning with the carb barrel opened no more than  $\frac{1}{4}$  for 2 to 3 minutes to ensure that the pump's functioning has come up to full potential before you go to fully open venturi. I have to be honest; I'm not sure, but I think that the only reason this is necessary is to work the pump's diaphragm to full flexibility, thereby giving full pumping volume. It doesn't really matter if I'm right or if I'm wrong, though; what does matter is to follow the instructions.

To my amazement, after only 1½ tanks of fuel, the engine's ring and sleeve had attained an excellent fit, and the .91 was already holding compression as though it was well broken in. I mean, what are we talking here? Eighteen to 20 ounces of fuel through a brand-new engine? Now that's a testament to O.S.'s level of machining fit and finish expertise. Fantastic compression seal notwithstanding, I ran the remaining tank and a half of break-in fuel through. This engine is a beauty; break-in is a one-time deal—so just do it.

As you can see from the rpm in the performance chart, this 4-stroke packs a punch. The 13x10, 14x8 and 15x6 all turn up in the 9,000rpm neighborhood (nice neighborhood!), and each of these props would work well on the .91, depending on the drag of the airframe you mount it in. I used all APC props except in the 13x10 and 14x8 sizes; I also ran Master Airscrew's Scimitar prop. These props seemed to work well and needed only minor balancing, just
