✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Personal identity and self-reflection agree well with narrative since it is through language that human beings co-exist. The relationship between personal identity and narrative originates from Hume's theory, which claims that how we connect with ideas as a product of memory constructs our sense of self. While Hume does not talk about narratives, it is apparent that narratives are ideas that appear as product of memory constructs. Hence, narration is a key way of connecting reflections and offering a sense of identity.

Narratives connect many incidences to create an ideal object such as a historical event. Narration and the selves play a major role in the creation of these ideal objects, although this does not necessarily apply to the creation of all ideal objects. Tolstoy's narration connects many incidences to explain to us about the death of Ivan Ilych. He starts by showing us the kind of life that Ivan led.

Ivan led a life that was full of hypocrisy. He lived by the standards of the aristocratic society rather than using his individual reasoning to determine his life. Ivan married because the society expected a brilliant young lawyer with money to have a wife from a good family like Praskovya. "Ivan Ilych married....because his social circle approved of the match (Tolstoy par. 65).

He also purchased a house in the city so that he could have a symbol of material status, as dictated by the aristocratic society. As the story develops, we get to know more about Ivan through his self-reflection.

In the reflection, Ivan examined his past life and the values that he had lived by in all of his life. After self-scrutiny of his life, Ivan recognized the inevitability of death and the hypocritical nature of his past life. Following these realizations, he decided to defend himself but he realized that he had nothing to use for his defense. He had to admit that he had spent all of his life unrealistically and that his perception on life and death was a lie. Apparently, Tolstoy connects all these incidences to explain the death of Ivan.

We also argue that observers ascribe identity, as it is not intrinsic in the associated things. Ivan's peers are the ones who recognize that Ivan does not like associating himself with unpleasant things. Later in the novel, we see this aspect establishing itself

Other-person-ness and the Person with Profound Disabilities Pia Matthews, 2022-10-13 Many people think that profound disability presents us with a real problem often because it seems difficult to connect with someone who does not seem to think or act like us Positioning profound disability in this way immediately sets up a them and us where the person with profound disability becomes the problematic other Attempts to bridge the them and us risk reducing everyone to the same where disability is not taken seriously In contrast to a them and us and negative connotations of the other found in the existentialist philosophies of writers like Sartre and Beauvoir Pia Matthews argues for a return to a positive view of the other One positive approach to the other based on an ethics of relationship as championed by Levinas seems to mitigate the other ness of profound disability However this still makes the person with profound disability dependent on the ethical concern of the more powerful other Instead this book argues for return to a personalist philosophy of being offered by Mounier Marcel and Wojty a and deepened by participation belonging and the possibility of contributing to the good of all This deepened philosophy of being gives a more solid foundation for people who are especially at the mercy of others It will be of interest to all scholars and students of disability studies philosophy and anthropology
