Study highlights: Improved in-line water quality in the watershed of Lake Michigan's Green Bay, Wisconsin, is attributed to the implementation of a watershed water quality plan. The plan calls for improved water quality in the watershed, which is the area of land that drains into the lake. The plan also calls for improved water quality in the lake itself. The plan is being implemented in a number of ways, including the construction of new water treatment facilities, the implementation of new water quality standards, and the implementation of new water quality monitoring programs. The plan is expected to result in improved water quality in the lake and in the watershed, which will benefit the people who live in the area and the people who visit the lake.
