Then glue the sets of four into sets of eight, but (not necessary) for every set of eight, hold out a set of four.

Figure 3-35: Both rings made to be curved and glued the rings of 16.

Glue the sets of eight to the sets of four to make half rings of 12 segments each. Use an edge sander or file sander to sand the ends into the same plane, and let glue the two half rings of 12 into a full ring of 24.

Once the ring is glued together, you will notice that it will not be strong enough to be used as a glue surface. To solve this problem, run each ring through a drum thickness sander to smooth out the surfaces. You must use a "push stick" to keep the ring moving smoothly through the thickness sander because the ring is so weak in diameter it will not span the distance between the infeed and outfeed rollers of the sander.

Figure 3-37: Apply drum sander ends of ring glue to the waste block. Use the hand sander to sand as needed.

No thickness sander? No problem! There is an easy solution to smooth out having a thickness sander. First, cut a plywood disc (waste block) about 61/2" in diameter and, using hot glue, glue the blank to the plywood. Try to glue the ring as close to "on center" as possible.

Using green, attach a panel sander to the plywood waste block and sand the whole thing on your table.

Using a belt sander, face off the ring to a flat surface. An added benefit is that you can also face the blank round. This eliminates the need to hand sand it round. I often follow this up by sanding the face with a thickness sander wrapped with abrasive paper. With one side face off flat, repeat the process for the second side of the blank.

You can easily remove the ring from the plywood waste block by using a chisel at the glue line. You could also try using double-sided tape instead of the hot glue. This will work best if you use corn-based tape. Conserve the ring for all the rings you have glued up.

A better method would be to sand the two faces with a disc sander, although it will be too likely the faces will be parallel to each other, which will be important later when gluing off individual rings.
