

Juan Gris
Portrait of the artist

Juan Gris Houses in Paris, 1911

"Culture is above all a product of urban culture. In Cubist painting the city can be found both as picture and as model for a composition of space" notes Juan Gris on the cover page of the exhibition "Cubism: The International Exhibition in Europe 1911-1921" of urban, its artistic language in Europe 1911-1921. Unlike the Impressionists and the Fauvists, who paint urban life as subject for the most "real" or a situation, for him a real life experiment, a challenge to create a work, the city is a subject that the artist uses to examine the perceptual variety of forms and volumes as well as their representational and pictorial possibilities.

Juan Gris painted the picture Houses in Paris (Houses à Paris) at a time in which, despite the physical proximity to Paris, he was still preoccupied with the work of Paul Cézanne. Gris, who also migrated from Spain (initially from Valencian Castellón), came to Paris in the year after studying painting and graphics in Madrid. He was to come into closer contact with Pablo Picasso, whose studio happened to be near by, and he was already among the artists represented by Daniel-Henry Kahnweiler.

Kahnweiler soon became central figure during visits to Picasso's studio. The theme was soon to repeatedly be used by Gris, who in that period also could not yet be counted among the Cubists. Until appearance in the "Salon des Indépendants" in the year was completely convinced Kahnweiler still in October of the same year Kahnweiler offered Gris an exclusive contract which was accepted in writing in February 1912. Kahnweiler later recalled: "From I was convinced I had discovered an important painter in this artist whose development I had already long since followed. I came to an agreement with him in the winter of the same year to buy his entire future production, plus all of the works that were in his studio."

In each visit Gris concentrated on constructing a new fully grounded urban culture. His work Houses in Paris can be read as an example how Gris did not proceed randomly, but instead working systematically to his art. Even in his early production around 1911, Gris anticipated urban construction of Juan Lechère. Cubism, as Kahnweiler also states in his comprehensive monograph about Gris:

In 1912 the Frenchman Gris published the following statement in his work "Chose à cultiver" (to be read with the Cubists) or the "Bulletin de la Synthèse": "Cubism" does not depend upon a certain way of life, nor upon a certain condition, but rather seeks to construct upon that founded on us being aligned with it. There are thought about its essence and its character as someone would who had observed it from afar and perceived himself with it before adopting it. Today it is clear to me that Cubism, with beginning, was nothing more than a new way of looking at the world... I mean that in the beginning I observed an art tradition that had no more to do with painting than the description of physical phenomena has to do with physics. But now, because the technique of painting has been freed for all elements of the so-called Cubist artists, and because through the conditions of the relationships between objects, the analysis of forms has freed them from its problems, one can no longer make this connection. If the work one called Cubism was only a certain aspect, then Cubism has disappeared. It is an artwork, then it has merged with painting."
