Cyrus D. Mead, 2018-01-29 Excerpt from Measuring Classroom Products in Berkely Practically every pupil in the system participated All classes were included there was no selection This is unusual in that most surveys have made random selections Of pupils In all we measured from five to six thousand children in each of the tests This involved the handling of about twenty five thousand papers We wish to commend your office force for the efficient assistance they rendered and for the excellent mimeographed forms they supplied for recording our data. The entire seminar took part in scoring the handwriting samples and in checking and verifying the scores on the various test sheets. Particular subjects however were assigned committees to assemble the data in tabular and graphic form and to make constructive suggestions. The following is a list of committees.

Scholars from a range of disciplines offer an expansive vision of the intersections between new information technologies and the humanities. Between Humanities and the Digital offers an expansive vision of how the humanities engage with digital and information technology, providing a range of perspectives on a quickly evolving, contested and exciting field. It documents the multiplicity of ways that humanities scholars have turned increasingly to digital and information technology as both a scholarly tool and a cultural object in need of analysis. The contributors explore the state of the art in digital humanities from varied disciplinary perspectives, offer a sample of digitally inflected work that ranges from an analysis of computational literature to the collaborative development of a Global Middle Ages humanities platform and examine new models for knowledge production and infrastructure. Their contributions show not only that the digital has prompted the humanities to move beyond traditional scholarly horizons but also that the humanities have pushed the digital to become more than a narrowly technical application.
